

Major Findings

- If the rate of land consumption before 1984 had been maintained, Delaware would have 72,000 fewer acres developed by 2002.
- This almost equals the number of acres of farmland now under easement in the state as a whole (79,955).